Instructions and information on the casting:

- Players of the Flight Murder Mystery Game can dress up as much as they want to for this evening in the style of their character. Please note that this is optional, not mandatory. Players who choose to do so, must provide for their own costumes and accessories. There are no costumes or accessories available at the location.
- The Flight Murder Mystery Game has a written script for ten characters, c.q. parts. All characters will be played, no matter what size your group is. In case a group does not consist of ten persons or a common multiple of ten, shared parts or double parts are introduced.
- For example: if your group has eight or nine players, one or two parts are left 'open'. This means one or two players must play two parts: they have a double part.
- If your group has more than ten players, you have more 'actors' than you have parts. This means parts will be shared. For example, in a group of 15 players, 5 people will be sharing their part with someone else. This will absolutely take nothing away from the joy of the game, but will in fact enhance the fun, because different players will each interpret the same part in their own way.
- The Flight Murder Mystery Game is always played with the entire group as a whole, no matter what size your party. The story is always played out centrally situated and visible for everybody. Your game host will ensure that everybody who wants to, gets their desired time in the spotlights. Should players choose to merely watch, they will not be obligated to do anything.
- The identity of the killer in the Flight Murder Mystery Game is kept a secret for all players up until the end – even for those players who are in fact the perpetrator. This way, all players experience the same suspension and thrill during the game, from start to finish.
